3 days would allow for a less rushed pace and increase interaction with faculty, administration and students and allow for a detailed site/laboratory facilities tour	1
Have not completed a site visit yet.	1
Have not done a site visit before so unable to provide opinion	1
I haven't done many site visits, but if the SS review report showed few findings, a reduced site visit could be warranted while SSR report with a number of findings would likely need more time.	1
I only have experience as a program director and 2 days seemed like enough time. I do not have any experience from the perspective of a site visitor	1
I think it depends on the self-study items that need to be address. For a large amount of self-study items, two days could be a very tight schedule.	1
Not sure. It depends on the number of "citations" that need to be reviewed.	1
This is my first site visit	1
Yes if they do not have a lot of things that need addressed from the self study	1
Yes, although I am not sure how much is dictated by the experience level of the lead reviewer.	1
for most yes. some could be done in 1.5 days	1
unknown- this will be my first	1
